NVOCC

An NVOCC, or Non-Vessel Operating Common Carrier, is an ocean carrier that provides freight transportation services without owning or operating its own vessels. They act as an intermediary, buying space on vessels from VOCCs (Vessel Operating Common Carriers) and then reselling that space to shippers, according to MercuryGate. NVOCCs essentially handle the logistics of ocean freight, taking responsibility for the shipment and issuing their own bills of lading, says InTek Logistics.

Detailed Explanation

Not a Vessel Owner:
Unlike VOCCs, which own and operate their own ships, NVOCCs do not own any vessels.

Buying and Reselling Space:
NVOCCs contract with VOCCs to secure space on their vessels for transporting cargo.
They then resell this space to individual shippers, acting as the carrier for the shipment.

Assuming Carrier Responsibilities:
Despite not owning ships, NVOCCs take on the responsibilities of an ocean carrier, including issuing their own bills of lading (House Bills of Lading or HBLs), says IncoDocs.

Global Supply Chain Link:
NVOCCs play a crucial role in global supply chains by facilitating ocean freight transportation between shippers and VOCCs, according to SJ Logistics.

How It Works?

What is a Non-Vessel Operating Common Carrier (NVOCC)? An ocean carrier who performs all of the services of a carrier, but who does not own their own vessel(s). They operate by leasing or buying available space in containers and using their own House Bill of Lading to contract with customers.

With over two decades of industry experience, we are recognized experts in land freight logistics and related services. Our well-established relationships with top-tier land freight carriers ensure consistent access to cargo space and competitive rates, even during high-demand periods.

We uphold the highest standards across our shipping operations. This includes the assembly and disassembly of Unit Load Devices (ULDs) when applicable—an approach that helps prevent cargo damage while improving both time and cost efficiency. Many of our freight stations also feature on-site or nearby ground transportation services, allowing for streamlined and effective shipment coordination.

Easy Shipping LTL freight service options

Standard or guaranteed delivery options are available for shipments exceeding 150 pounds. For volume shipments that surpass 5,000 pounds or consist of more than six pallets, spot quotes can be obtained. Services also include cross-border shipping between the United States, Canada, and Mexico, as well as expedited and trade show deliveries. You can receive a complimentary Quick Quote for your upcoming shipment without the need for a login. Additionally, by providing a sample shipment, you can obtain a free freight analysis to determine potential savings.

How It Works?
